Abstract Turkic-type orogeny is a class of collisional mountain building, in which the precollision history of one, or both, of the colliding continents involves the growth of very large, subcontinent-size subduction-accretion complexes, into which magmatic arc axes commonly migrate and thus enlarge the continent to which they are attached.

Moreover, mountain-building and basin formation processes are geodynamically coupled. A modern and comprehensive understanding of orogenesis, as presented in this new book, deserves to be part of the petroleum geologist’s reading. An orogeny is an event that leads to both structural deformation and compositional differentiation of the Earth's lithosphere (crust and uppermost mantle) at convergent plate margins. An orogen or orogenic belt develops when a continental plate crumples and is pushed upwards to form one or more mountain ranges ; this involves a series of geological processes collectively called orogenesis .
